INTEREST AND STATEMENT OF POSITION OF *AMICI CURIAE

2 Michael A. Cox is the Attorney General for the State of Michigan, which shares 3 constitutional and common law roots with Arizona. Attorney General Cox is authorized by 4 statute to intervene on behalf of the People of the State of Michigan in any court or tribunal 5 when, in his judgment, the interests of the People are implicated. Mich. Comp. Laws § 14.28.
6 See also Associated Builders and Contractors v. Perry, 115 F.3d 386, 390-392 (6th Cir. 1997).

8 Like Arizona, the State of Michigan and the amici States have the power to concurrently 9 enforce Federal immigration law, provided that the States do not create new categories of aliens 10 or attempt to independently determine the immigration status of an alien. This is the regulatory 11 scheme envisioned by Congress – which is one of concurrent enforcement – where the Federal 12 government must respond to any inquiry by a State or local government agency seeking to verify 13 the immigration status of any person within its jurisdiction. 8 U.S.C. § 1373(c). Such a duty is 14 predicated on the principle that the States have the authority to make those inquiries regarding 15 whether aliens are residing illegally within their borders. Indeed, that is precisely what A.R.S.
16 11-1051 and A.R.S. 13-3883(A)(5) seek to do – identify unlawful aliens within the jurisdiction
17 of Arizona and to bring those persons to the attention of Federal immigration authorities.<sup>1</sup>

19 By lawsuit, rather than by legislation, the Federal government seeks to negate this pre-20 existing power of the States to verify a person's immigration status and similarly seeks to reject 21 the assistance that the States can lawfully provide to the Federal government. That result 22 contravenes Congress's intent of cooperative enforcement and replaces it with a regulatory 23 scheme whereby the Federal government may continue to selectively enforce – or as its brief 24 suggests, selectively not enforce – the laws enacted by Congress.

26
27 <sup>1</sup> Due to the page limitations set forth by this Court in its order in the companion case Friendly
28 House et al v. Whiting et al, No. CV 10-1061-PHX-SRB (Dkt. # 282), the brief of the amici States will address only the issue of whether Sections 2 and 6 of S.B. 1070 are preempted.

ARGUMENT

2 This Court should begin its analysis "with the assumption that the historic police powers
3 of the States [are] not to be superseded by the Federal Act unless that was the clear and manifest 4 purpose of Congress." Altria Group v. Good, __ U.S. __; 129 S. Ct. 538, 543 (2008). Where the 5 statute in question is susceptible to more than one plausible reading, courts must generally 6 "accept the reading that disfavors pre-emption." Altria Group, 129 S. Ct. at 543.

8 The U.S. Supreme Court has made clear that "[t]he States enjoy no power with respect to 9 the classification of aliens." Plyler v. Doe, 457 U.S. 202, 225 (1982). In the realm of the 10 regulation of legal immigration, State regulation of legal aliens is preempted unless Congress 11 specifically provides such power to the States. See, e.g., Graham v. Richardson, 403 U.S. 365, 12 378 (1971). Thus, "state regulation not congressionally sanctioned that discriminates against 13 aliens lawfully admitted to the country is impermissible if it imposes additional burdens not 14 contemplated by Congress." Toll v. Moreno, 458 U.S. 1, 12-13 (1982)(emphasis added).

16 But the same standard does not apply to aliens who are unlawfully in the country. As the 17 U.S. Supreme Court explained in De Canas v. Bica, 424 U.S. 351, 354 (1976), it "has never held 18 that every state enactment which in any way deals with aliens is a regulation of immigration and 19 thus per se pre-empted by this constitutional power[.]" Rather, States have authority to act with 20 respect to illegal aliens, if that action is consistent with the Federal objectives set by Congress.
21 De Canas, 424 U.S. at 357. Congress intended to allow States to regulate concurrently with the 22 Federal government with regard to the employment of illegal aliens and, therefore, such 23 regulation is not preempted. Toll, 458 U.S. at 13 n. 18.

25 This Court must presume that S.B. 1070 is not preempted, unless (1) the statute 26 constitutes a "regulation of immigration;" or (2) the statute conflicts with Federal laws, such that 27 it "stands as an obstacle to the accomplishment of the full purposes and objectives of Congress."
28

1 De Canas, 424 U.S. at 356-357, 363. Senate Bill 1070 does not constitute a "regulation of 2 immigration" because it does not define who should or should not be admitted into the country, 3 and the conditions under which a legal entrant may remain. According to the brief for the United 4 States, the declared purpose of the statute in section 1 to pursue "attrition through enforcement" 5 constitutes the creation of a state-centric immigration policy. But this claim lacks merit. Senate 6 Bill 1070 does not create a class of aliens different from that set forth under Federal law, nor 7 does it impose restrictions on lawful aliens outside of those in Federal Law. Rather, the statute –
8 and in particular sections 2 and 6 addressing the authority of Arizona to investigate or arrest 9 unlawful aliens – simply exercises Arizona's inherent authority to act with respect to illegal 10 aliens.
11

12 Moreover, the incidental burdens of Arizona's new reporting scheme on the executive 13 branch do not "stand as an obstacle" to the accomplishment of the full purposes and objectives of 14 Congress. The United States argues that S.B. 1070 is inconsistent with the policy objectives of 15 the executive branch. But the objectives set forth by Congress – not the executive – are the 16 relevant objectives for purposes of a preemption analysis. Here, Congress has directed that 17 Federal immigration officials "shall respond" to any State inquiry seeking to verify the 18 citizenship status of any individual within its jurisdiction. 8 U.S.C. § 1373(c). By its very terms, 19 this law presumes that State law enforcement officers have inherent authority to inquire into the 20 immigration status of persons within their borders. And that is precisely what A.R.S. 11-1051 21 and A.R.S. 13-3883(A)(5) allow Arizona to do – investigate or arrest aliens who are classified by 22 the Federal government as unlawful and verify their immigration status with the Federal 23 government.

26 Finally, S.B. 1070 cannot be said to be an "obstacle" to Federal enforcement of 27 immigration law, because the Federal government at all times maintains its authority to 28

1 determine how to proceed once an unlawful alien is brought to its attention by Arizona. The 2 statute simply requires a police officer who has reasonable suspicion to believe that an individual 3 who has already been lawfully detained is in the United States illegally to ascertain that person's 4 immigration status and report unlawful aliens to Federal authorities. But it is ultimately those 5 Federal authorities who must identify the individual as being in the country illegally and who 6 must determine whether the individual must be deported or if that person will be allowed to stay 7 in the United States for humanitarian or other reasons. Accordingly, the United States' 8 preemption argument must fail.

10 1. Senate Bill 1070 does not constitute a regulation of immigration.

11 A statute is a "regulation of immigration" if it defines "who should or should not be 12 admitted into the country, and the conditions under which a legal entrant may remain." De 13 Canas, 424 U.S. at 354-355. For instance, a State cannot impose additional requirements for 14 aliens to enter the State that go beyond those set by Congress to allow entry into the United 15 States. Moreover, a State cannot create state-level criteria to determine which aliens were 16 allowed to remain in the State. In this case, the United States claims that the statement that 17 Arizona would seek "attrition through enforcement" constitutes the unlawful creation of a state-18 level immigration policy inconsistent with Federal policy. But the statute as a whole makes clear 19 how Arizona's "policy" will be enacted – by exercising its authority under Federal law to 20 investigate or arrest unlawful aliens and to seek the assistance of the Federal government in 21 identifying whether a specific individual is in the United States unlawfully. See 8 U.S.C. § 22 1373(c). Moreover, Arizona's statement of policy does not change any policy or law regarding 23 who is or is not an unlawful alien under Federal law. It does, however, highlight the obvious – 24 enforcement of immigration laws will reduce violations of those laws. Any time a State chooses 25 to assist in enforcing Federal law, it does so with the goal of reducing violations of that law – the 26
27
28

1 goal of attrition through enforcement. A State's enforcement of Congressionally-approved 2 immigration standards does not establish new immigrations standards. Rather, it reduces 3 violations of the Federal standards, which is unquestionably the policy goal Congress set when it 4 enacted those standards in the first place.

5 Federal courts have long held that State law enforcement officers have inherent authority 6 to arrest for violations of Federal law, as long as the arrest is authorized by State law. See 7 Davida v. United States, 422 F.2d 528, 530 (10th Cir. 1970). See also United States v.
8 Swarovski, 557 F.2d 40, 43-49 (2d Cir. 1977); and United States v. Janik, 723 F.2d 537, 548 (7th 9 Cir. 1983) (holding that as a matter of state law, Illinois officers "have implicit authority to make 10 Federal arrests"). Congress augmented the State's inherent authority by providing that States 11 could arrest persons who are illegally present in the United States under Federal authority where 12 other conditions were met. 8 U.S.C. § 1252c. As explained by the U.S. Court of Appeals for the 13 Tenth Circuit, Congress intended that § 1252c enhance State power and that it did not " limit or 14 displace the preexisting general authority of state or local police officers to investigate and make 15 arrests for violations of Federal law, including immigration laws. Instead, 1252c merely creates 16 an additional vehicle for the enforcement of Federal immigration law." United States v.
17 Vasquez-Alvarez, 176 F.3d 1294, 1298, 1299 (10th Cir. 1999).

18
20 21 The reasoning of Vasquez-Alvarez is consistent with the conclusions reached by the 22 circuits in the specific realm of immigration law. In Gonzalez v. Peoria, 722 F.2d 468, 477 (9th 23 Cir. 1983), the Ninth Circuit held that a State may arrest a person for violating Federal 24 immigration law, so long as the police "have probable cause to believe either that illegal entry 25 has occurred or that another offense has been committed." Likewise, the Tenth Circuit applied 26 the same reasoning in United States v. Salinas-Calderon, 728 F.2d 1298 (10th Cir. 1984), where 27 a local law enforcement officer had "reasonable suspicion" that a person had violated Federal 28

1 immigration law. In Salinas-Calderon, a Kansas State Trooper pulled over a driver of Mexican 2 descent based on his suspicion the driver was intoxicated. During the stop, the Trooper 3 discovered not only that the driver could not speak English, but also six adult males in the bed of 4 his pickup truck were unable to speak English. The Tenth Circuit held that the Trooper had 5 "general investigatory authority to inquire into possible immigration violations" and that his 6 questions to the driver's wife about the defendant's green card were reasonable under Terry v.
7 Ohio. Salinas-Calderon, 728 F.2d 1301 n 3 (citing Terry v. Ohio, 392 U.S. 1, 19 (1968)). When 8 the Trooper ascertained that the defendant was from Mexico and did not have identification 9 papers or a green card, he had probable cause to make a warrantless arrest for violation of the 10 immigration laws. Salinas-Calderon, 728 F.2d at 1301.

12 In fact, a 2002 memorandum by the Department of Justice's Office of Legal Counsel 13 concludes that States have "inherent power" to make arrests for violations of Federal law and 14 that 8 U.S.C. § 1252c does not preempt State authority to arrest for Federal violations. See Dep't 15 of Justice, Office of Legal Counsel, Non-preemption of the authority of state and local law 16 enforcement officials to arrest aliens for immigration violations, (April 3, 2002) available at 17 <http://www.aclu.org/FilesPDFs/ACF27DA.pdf> (accessed on July 12, 2010). This statement of 18 the official position of the Department of Justice is consistent with decisions of the U.S. Courts 19 of Appeals for the Ninth and Tenth Circuits holding that State law enforcement can specifically 20 arrest a person suspected of violating Federal immigration law.

23 The requirement in A.R.S. 11-1051 that an officer have "reasonable suspicion" that a 24 person in lawful custody is an unlawful alien before investigating that person's immigration 25 status is also consistent with U.S. Supreme Court precedent. In Muehler v. Mena, 544 U.S. 93, 26 100-101 (2005), the U.S. Supreme Court held that a police officer could question a person who is 27 lawfully in custody about that person's immigration status without triggering an additional 28

1 seizure under the meaning of the Fourth Amendment. Specifically, the Court held that once a 2 person is lawfully in custody, "the officers did not need reasonable suspicion to ask Mena for her 3 name, date and place of birth, or immigration status." Mena, 544 U.S. at 101.

4 Thus, S.B. 1070 does not "regulate" immigration because its requirements are consistent 5 with the power of State law enforcement to inquire into a person's immigration status. Mena, 6 544 U.S. at 101. The Tenth Circuit's decision in Salinas-Calderon – which sustained the 7 argument made by the United States – is consistent with the DOJ's 2002 memorandum and with 8 the provision of S.B. 1070 that requires an officer engaged in a lawful stop, detention, or arrest 9 of a suspect to verify that person's immigration status where there is "reasonable suspicion" that 10 the individual is an unlawful alien.<sup>2</sup> Likewise, Salinas-Calderon, Gonzalez, and the official 11 memorandum of the Department of Justice, support section 6 of the statute which permits an 12 officer to arrest a person where there is probable cause that the individual has committed an 13 offense that could result in deportation. Accordingly, because S.B. 1070 does not "regulate" 14 immigration, it is not preempted by Federal law.

17 2. The incidental burdens of Arizona's new reporting scheme on the executive 18 branch do not "stand as an obstacle" to the accomplishment of the full 19 purposes and objectives of Congress.

20 The preemption doctrine, which rests on the Supremacy Clause, is intended to ensure that 21 state action does not "stand[] as an obstacle to the accomplishment and execution of the full 22 purposes and objectives of Congress." Hines v. Davidowitz, 312 U.S. 52, 67 (1941). But here, 23 the United States argues that S.B. 1070 is preempted because it interferes with the executive 24 branch's discretionary allocation of resources.

25 <sup>2</sup> The United States argues that enforcement of sections 2 and 6 could hypothetically lead to 26 "harassment" of legal aliens and, therefore, those sections are preempted. This argument lacks 27 merit, as a mere hypothetical or imaginary harm is not sufficient to find a statute facially 28 unconstitutional. See United States v. Raines, 362 U.S. 17, 22 (1960). Rather, the proper remedy for a person allegedly harassed by Arizona law enforcement under section 2 or 6 would be a 42 U.S.C. § 1983 action, not a claim of preemption.

1 To support this claim, the United States cites Crosby v. National Foreign Trade Counsel, 2 530 U.S. 363 (2000), in which the United States Supreme Court held that a Massachusetts statute 3 imposing sanctions on Burma was preempted by a Congressional statute imposing sanctions on 4 that country. The Federal statute gave the President the authority to control economic sanctions
5 against Burma and directed the President to proceed diplomatically in developing a strategy 6 towards Burma. The Massachusetts statute, on the other hand, broadly barred its citizens from 7 engaging in commerce with Burma. But the mandatory scheme imposed by Massachusetts 8 interfered with the delegation of power by Congress to the President to modify or end the 9 sanctions at his discretion or to use the promise to do so diplomatically to encourage the 10 Burmese regime in a more democratic direction. Crosby, 530 U.S. at 376-377. Because the 11 Massachusetts statute interfered with Congress's intent to give the President maximum flexibility 12 in crafting sanctions against Burma, the Supreme Court held that it was preempted.

15 No such conflict exists here as between Federal immigration law and S.B. 1070. First, 16 Congress has provided that the executive branch has no discretion regarding whether to answer 17 an inquiry from a State regarding the immigration status of a person in custody. Under 8 U.S.C.
18 § 1373(c), Federal immigration authorities "shall respond" to an inquiry from a State agency 19 seeking to verify the citizenship or immigration status of any individual within that State's 20 jurisdiction. In fact, the U.S. "may not" prohibit or restrict a State from seeking information 21 regarding the citizenship or immigration status of any individual. 8 U.S.C. § 1373(a). Likewise, 22 Federal, State, and local entities are barred from preventing their officials from exchanging 23 information with Federal immigration office. 8 U.S.C. § 1373(b). Again, Congress's use of the 24 word "shall" in § 1373(c) demonstrates that the executive branch lacks any discretion whether to 25 answer these inquiries. Nor does the statute limit in any way the number of inquiries a State 26 might make. Therefore, the executive branch's discretionary allocation of resources cannot 27
28

1 justify its preemption argument. Indeed, this very argument was rejected by the Ninth Circuit in 2 Chicanos Por La Causa v. Napolitano, 558 F.3d 856, 866-867 (9th Cir. 2009) (holding that 3 Arizona's requirement to participate in E-Verify was not preempted because "while Congress 4 made participation in E-Verify voluntary at the national level, that did not in and of itself 5 indicate that Congress intended to prevent States from making participation mandatory").

7 Second, Congress has stated that the Attorney General "shall" cooperate with the States 8 to assure that information that would assist State law enforcement in arresting and detaining "an 9 alien illegally present in the United States" under certain conditions is made available to such 10 officials. 8 U.S.C. § 1252c(b). Congress's use of the word "shall" indicates a mandatory, rather 11 than discretionary, duty on part of the executive branch to assist State law enforcement in 12 carrying out the State's prerogative under 8 U.S.C. § 1252c(a). Because the Congress has not 13 given the executive branch any discretion in determining whether to assist Arizona, its 14 complaints about draining Federal resources cannot form the basis of a claim of preemption.
15

16 Finally, any claim that S.B. 1070 interferes with the Federal government's allocation of 17 resources must fail because Arizona does not, and cannot, place any obligation on the Federal 18 government after an unlawful alien is reported. Under A.R.S. 11-1051(C), a law enforcement 19 agency "shall" notify Federal immigration officials. Once that notification has been completed, 20 it is ultimately up to the Federal government how to proceed. The Federal government could, for 21 example, exercise its discretion by allowing the unlawful alien to remain in the United States in 22 the interest of providing humanitarian relief. Or the Federal government could simply refuse to 23 process any unlawful alien referred to them by Arizona officials, as suggested in May 2010 by
25
26
27
28

1 the head of the Immigration and Customs Enforcement agency.<sup>3</sup> There is simply no provision in 2 S.B. 1070 that would, or could, permit Arizona to overrule such an exercise of discretion.

3 Accordingly, the claim of the United States that S.B. 1070 is preempted because it 4 "interferes" with the enforcement priorities of the executive branch must fail.

5 CONCLUSION AND RELIEF SOUGHT

6 WHEREFORE, the amici respectfully urge this Honorable Court to DENY the Plaintiff's
